Mpho's Blue Bicycle

1 Mpho lived in a small village outside Mahikeng. Every morning he walked eight kilometres to school, and every afternoon he walked eight kilometres home again. By the time he got home, his legs felt as heavy as bags of cement.

2 "I need a bicycle," Mpho told his grandfather one evening. Grandpa Tau laughed kindly. "Then you must work for it, my boy. Money does not grow on trees."

3 So Mpho made a plan. Every Saturday he helped his aunt sell vetkoek at the taxi rank. She paid him R40 a day. Mpho put every cent into an old coffee tin under his bed. Some weekends he wanted to buy sweets or airtime, but he never touched the tin.

4 After six months, Mpho counted his money. He had R1 000! He bought an old, rusty bicycle from Mr Molefe, who owned the shop next to the clinic. The chain was broken and the back tyre was flat, but Mpho's eyes shone like stars.

5 Grandpa Tau and Mpho worked on the bicycle for two weekends. They fixed the chain, patched the tyre and painted the frame bright blue. "Now it looks brand new," said Grandpa proudly.

6 A few weeks later, Mrs Kgosi, their old neighbour, became very ill. The clinic was far away, and she was too weak to walk. Mpho jumped on his bicycle and rode to the clinic to fetch her medicine. He was back in less than an hour.
